

'Govt shouldn't compromise in fighting against terror'

Srinivas Reddy | TNN

The terrorists' attempt is not only create panic but also to weaken confidence in the government of the target country. After the recent blasts on the Delhi High Court premises, the question of the country's security and its people has been raised again.

the issue.

The government needs to think over the issue of terrorism control seriously. All the SAARC countries need to discuss measures to curb terrorism completely. Government should make efficient use of technology and install CCTVs in public places. It should recruit as many officials to monitor the cameras and issue identification cards to every individual living in the country and keep a watchful eye on the people coming in from the outside the country.

Now-a-days we are hearing more about blasts and terrorism in our country and other neighbouring countries. All countries should join hands to eradicate terrorist activities. Apart from tightening security the government should provide employment for the youth. This way youths will be on the right path and we can control terrorism activities.

Reshma V and Sonal

The government should punish those terrorists who have been nabbed and strengthen the internal and external security in all metros in the country. Government should provide modern equipment to detect weapons in public places.

Prashanth M

Along with the government, public has cooperate in taking measures to control terrorism in our country. Public need to be aware of what is going on in their neighbourhood. If they see anything suspicious, they should inform the police immediately. Even police should support people and provide assistance. Security needs to be very tight in public places like bus stands, airport, railway station, malls, as these are the places mostly targeted for blasts and other terrorist activities.

Karthik Hasabi

Terrorists use e-mails and telephones to communicate. So, government should monitor the net and telephonic conversations for intelligence reports. Every year, we see that security is tightened only after blasts and as usual security slackens after a while in public places. Government should not compromise in tightening security to avoid untoward incidents.

Vidyashree Koti and Shritu S

The government should form a security force and investigation teams to monitor such activities in the country. Public also should keep an eye on the surroundings and help authorities.
